Today we chronicle the death of a neighbor, Charles Luebke, found dead on the floor of the house by his daughter returning home from a neighbor. He died peacefully without a struggle, with his glasses on and pipe in hand unbroken. Charles Luebke was born in Germany near the shores of the Baltic Sea seventy-three years ago. He came to the United States when a young man, settling in Wisconsin, where he followed the machinist's trade and carpentering, as well as keeping bees with good profit.

He came to Los Angeles many years ago and settled in Antelope Valley some nineteen years ago, doing his share to build up the Valley.
